

RUSSIA WILL TAKE PORTION

Is To Keep Possession of the Cargo of the Arabia That Is Contraband of War.

UNITED STATES IS DISSATISFIED

The Possible Outcome of the Present Situation is Hard To See--Protest Is Backed by Proper Authority.

Vladivostok, Aug. 5.—It has been decided by the prize court to confiscate each portion of the cargo of the Portland and Asiatic steamer Arabia as was consigned to Japanese ports, namely, 5,500 pounds of flour and the railroad equipment, this portion constituting less than half the bulk and weight of her cargo, the remainder consisting of 142,500 pounds of flour consigned to Hong Kong. The confiscated portion of the cargo is now being unloaded. As soon as this is completed the steamer will be released.

Russia Believes Incident Closed. St. Petersburg, Aug. 5.—The announcement that the steamer Arabia will be released and that only the portion of her cargo consigned to Japanese ports will be held will, it is believed, end the Arabian incident so far as the United States is concerned, since the United States has asked nothing more than prompt action for the immediate release of the ship and the portion of the cargo not declared contraband.

America Is Not Satisfied. Washington, Aug. 5.—The officials of the state department do not care to pass any opinion upon the legality, from an international standpoint, of the action of the Russia prize court at Vladivostok in the case of the Arabia until some obscure points in the decision are cleared up.

Although the department has finally decided that it will not promulgate any set of rules which it regards as proper to govern the conduct of neutral commerce and shipping in belligerent waters or on the high seas, it will, in the course of treatment of the separate cases of seizure of American goods during the progress of the war, sufficiently define the views of the American government on this subject.

Foodstuffs Are Exempt. The Arabia case is likely to develop strongly one important contention on the part of this government—namely, that foodstuffs on a neutral ship are not subject to seizure, even in the war zone, provided they are not intended for the use of the army or navy of a belligerent. It has been supposed that the Russian government itself subscribed fully to this rule, and that is why Washington is waiting to learn what unknown and qualifying conditions were developed before the Vladivostok prize court to justify the confiscation of American flour consigned to Japanese individuals and not to the government nor intended for its use.

It is felt here that the Russian government fully understands the distinction which is here drawn between individual and national property.

Germany Investigates. Berlin, Aug. 5.—The German government has instituted an investigation into all the circumstances connected with the sinking of the German steamer Then by the Vladivostok squadron off the coast of Japan, preparatory to making representations at St. Petersburg. The German government admits that Vice Admiral Skrydloff noted within the Russian prize regulations in capturing the Then, but the officials intimate that the foreign office questions the right of capture when provisions are consigned to private firms instead of to a belligerent government.

Knight Commander Case. London, Aug. 5.—The protest over the sinking of the British steamer Knight Commander has not yet reached the Russian foreign office. Count Benckendorff, the Russian ambassador, had an extended conference with Foreign Secretary Lansdowne, which brought the two governments appreciably nearer a settlement. There is talk of a modification of the Russian naval regulations which will prevent a recurrence of incidents such as the sinking of the Knight Commander. With respect to the Peninsular and Oriental company's steamer Malacca, a claim for compensation will immediately be made.

Besides the lumber, 40,000 pieces of pine also was asked for, with the request that the shipment be expedited. This is the second order for lumber for the canal. The purchasing agent of the commission is now in New Orleans, supervising the shipment of 1,500,000 feet of yellow pine to the isthmus. The lumber is to be used in repairing old and constructing new buildings and the piling for canal construction.

EADS BRIDGE CONTEST BEFORE DEPARTMENT

Attorney General Crow of Missouri Carries Case to War Bureau for Action by Secretary.

Washington, Aug. 5.—The brief of Attorney General Edward C. Crow of Missouri in the matter of the control of the Merchants' and Eads bridges at St. Louis has reached the war department. The attorney general began action against the companies in the state courts with a view to breaking up what he asserted to be a monopoly in restraint of trade, but the court held that these corporations were in the nature of terminal companies and therefore not subject to the prohibitions imposed by law upon consolidations of railroads.

Therefore the attorney general has had recourse to the national government and has appealed to the war department to act, as that department is directly charged by congress with responsibility for the construction and operation of bridges over navigable streams.

Judge Advocate General Davis has been following the case very closely and went to Missouri to attend the session of the state court when it was argued. Therefore he is in position to make an early report upon the matter to Secretary Taft, who will decide whether or not the United States government shall proceed against the bridge companies.

If he decides in the affirmative the papers will be sent to the attorney to take legal proceedings in the federal courts. The interests involved are very large.

SEWAGE PLANT AT STATE HOSPITAL

Epidemic of Typhoid Fever at Mendota Hospital Will Be Stopped Vers Shortly.

[Special to The Gazette.] Madison, Wis., August 5.—The epidemic of typhoid fever, which has been raging in the Wisconsin state insane asylum at Mendota, has caused the state board of control to determine upon an elaborate and extensive system of sewage disposal, which it is hoped, will prevent the continuance of the plague.

More than 50 patients and a considerable number of employees and attendants have been stricken. A dozen more or less deaths have occurred, and the head of the institution, Dr. E. L. Bullard, was removed during the progress of the disease. Dr. Chas. C. Gort, the new superintendent, recommended to the state board of control that the method of dumping the waste of from which the water supply is taken must be abandoned. This, it is believed, is the only effective means of eliminating the typhoid epidemic. The state board of control has secured the services of P. E. Turney, expert sanitary engineer and dean of the University of Wisconsin college of engineering, to supervise the construction of a complete system of disposal. The septic tank system will probably be used, such as Professor Turney successfully built for the city of Madison, and no expense will be spared to remove the typhoid from the insane charges of the state.

FOURTEEN TIMES BEFORE A COURT

Madison Man Holds the Record for Convictions in the Municipal Court.

Madison, Wis., August 5.—Specialist John Starr, who holds the record of having been convicted fourteen times in the municipal court of this city for minor offenses, was yesterday found guilty by a jury of burglarizing a freight car in the Illinois Central yards and taking therefrom a sack of potatoes. He was tried on the same charge July 12 but the jury, after being out all night, reported to the court that it was unable to agree. Starr is a tough character and was much feared in the neighborhood in which he resided. The penalty prescribed for the offense of which he was convicted is from one to five years in state prison at Waupun.

PEACE RUMORS GAIN CREDENCE AT CHICAGO

Persistent Stories Are Afloat That a Settlement Is in Sight, Though Packers Enter a Denial.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—The stockyards strike yesterday became a paper warfare between the meat packers and the butcher workmen. Statements were given out by each side.

The packers declared they were making excellent progress in all plants and reported the total number of men employed. No figures were quoted for the Chicago establishment. In the union statement an appeal was made for higher wages for sociological reasons. The child labor law was defended, and it was said a reduction in wages would have the effect of compelling a large part of the packing house workers to ask charity.

In the Chicago plants the desertions again outnumbered the recruits. The packers explained this by saying they were weeding out the inefficient men, of whom they received an oversupply from the employment agents. The loss in numbers, they said, was more than counterbalanced by the increased skill of the workers who remained, and the output showed a slight gain. An improvement was noted in the operation of many departments.

The scattered instances of violence were mostly personal encounters. More strict rules were laid down by the police and their number was augmented by a small addition.

There were persistent rumors of a move for another peace conference to settle the strike. The packers and the union leaders declared the rumors to be without foundation. They were based largely on the knowledge that President Donnelly of the butcher workmen, who delayed his return from the Western packing center two days, would arrive this morning.

In Donnelly's absence the strike has become everyone's strike, and hence no one's strike. "We will see Donnelly before we do anything about the ice teamsters," said President George Wilson of that union when asked if the drivers would carry out the program of cutting off the ice supply of the dealers who patronized the large packers.

NEW PHASE OF THE TROUBLE

Federal Interference Is Possible in Chicago as Result of a Recent Conference.

PACKERS ARE SATISFIED TO WAIT

Strike Leaders Are Confident of Winning, if They Can Continue the Present Situation a Week Longer.

[Special by Scripps-Mellae.] Chicago, Ill., Aug. 5.—Federal interference in the stockyards strike was suggested today when International Secretary Call of butcher workmen divulged the fact he had been in conference with representatives of the bureau of labor and commerce. Who this agent is or what his immediate plans are, Call refused to state. If the stockyards strikers stand firm until next week their leaders believe they can secure a settlement. The packers declare they have no reason to meet the union officials.

Donnelly Back. President Donnelly returned to this city this morning from Kansas City and other western cities where he has been encouraging the strikers. He says everywhere the strikers are confident of winning. He says many butchers thrown out by the trust have started independent plants again.

More Active. Strikers threaten to make the strike active from now on. They say in the past the strike has been passive. The return of Donnelly has brought active plans to the delivery of meat from a number of cold storage warehouses. The allied trades' executive committee met this morning to act upon the teamsters' position, but adjourned to await Donnelly's views. The attitude of the freight handlers in the cold storage plants depends upon what the teamsters do. Donnelly also will decide whether the ice wagon drivers will stop delivering ice to retailers who buy from the packers. Castella Chera, a strike-breaker at Armour's, was attacked by three men this morning and left in a serious condition.

Start a Run. A run was started on the Drovers' Trust and Savings bank at the stockyards today by a report the bank's money was being used by the packers to assist in winning the strike. The story was denied by the officials of the bank. Several hundred depositors crowded the bank to secure money. The money is being paid out as fast as called for and it is believed the pressure is over.

Call for Aid. Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 5.—Missouri unions have been called upon by the striking butchers for financial aid. The strikers' commissary store has been opened as directed by Donnelly.

At St. Joe. St. Joseph, Mo., Aug. 5.—It is estimated the packers are running 75 per cent of their capacity in cattle and sheep. The importation of strike-breakers continues.

SEVEN DROWN IN A SMALL BOAT

WERE OUT ON FISHING TRIP

Yacht Bearing American Tourists Stranded Near Bear Island and Anomaly to Reach Shore Drings Disaster in Its Wake.

Halifax, N. S., Aug. 5.—Through the capsizing of a small boat, in which nine persons were attempting to reach shore from a stranded yacht, seven of the occupants were drowned. The drowned are:

George Leach, aged 40, manager of a woolen mill, Nasonville, R. I. Capt. Charles Hersey, Digby. Mrs. Vedto, aged 30, Digby. Mrs. O'Reilly, aged 40, supposed to be a New York woman; her son aged 13, and daughter.

The name of the other victim cannot be ascertained. American Tourists in Party. The accident occurred in the Annapolis basin, near Bear Island. The yacht which the unfortunate people left was the Ulla, owned by Commodore Irving of the Digby Yacht club, and was in charge of Capt. Charles Hersey. She left Digby for Plinkney's point, at the mouth of Bear River, to take out a party of American tourists who were camping in that vicinity. The boat left the point about 10 a. m. with the party on board and a small tender in tow.

Arrangements had been made to land the party at Smith's Cove, near Bear River station, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The party was enjoying a fishing trip on the cabin.

About 5 o'clock a man at Smith's Cove saw the yacht aground on the Bear Island bar, and the tender a short distance from the yacht, bottom up, with people evidently clinging to the bottom.

Help Is Not at Hand. He at once gave an alarm. S. Thompson, the Dominion Atlantic railway agent at Bear River, and a number of others ran for the nearest boat, a dory, half a mile distant.

Another crowd started for the Harbor View house, a mile away. The dory was reached first, but was 200 yards from the shore. Herbert Hinfeld swam for the boat and the rescuing party was soon at the scene of the disaster. They found three bodies floating in the water. One man still showed signs of life. He was Vedto. He was hastened to his home in Bear River, and it is thought he will recover.

Three bodies are in the Bear River station, and it is difficult to learn their correct names or native places. It appears that when the yacht grounded on the bar about half a mile from land, all the occupants of the craft got on board a ten-foot tender and began to row toward shore. The little boat was swamped by her heavy load.

TRADING STAMP LAW IS INVALID

Court Decides That New York Regulation Is Unconstitutional.

Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 5.—The law passed by the state legislature at its last session regulating the issue of trading stamps and attaching a penalty for violation of the act has been declared unconstitutional by Supreme Court Justice Nash. The justice declared that it is the settled law of this state that it is not within the power of the legislature to suppress or regulate the issuing or sale of trading stamps. The opinion was rendered in the case of Edward Appel, a cigar dealer who was arrested for selling a cigar and a package of tobacco accompanied with tobacco coupons which did not have a redeemable cash value printed upon their face as required by the trading stamp law.

VERDICT OF THE PARTY

From the report of the Committee on Credentials to the REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION, 1904, which was unanimously adopted by that convention, June 22d, 1904.

Your committee report it to be their final judgment that the convention which elected said John C. Spooner, J. V. Quinlan, J. W. Babcock and Emil Schenck as delegates at large, and their alternates at large, to this convention from the state of Wisconsin WAS THE REGULAR CONVENTION OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY IN WISCONSIN, and that the delegates elected by it are the regular elected delegates at large from the state of Wisconsin to the republican convention, and, as such, are entitled to seats in this convention.

SILENCE NOT, A PLEDGE.

In his role of adviser emeritus of the democratic party, Mr. Grover Cleveland has been discussing the action of the St. Louis convention. Referring to the money question he says that he does not "overlook the fact that two clear and unimpeached verdicts of the people stand recorded in favor of the gold standard, and that his perpetuity has been secured by federal enactments." Then, the distinguished ex-president goes on to argue that the telegram of Judge Parker to the convention supplies a "blank in a disabled platform," and pledges the democratic party to the maintenance of the gold standard.

With all deference to the opinion of Mr. Cleveland, who is offering a mitigating circumstance in behalf of a client who has already pleaded guilty, the Parker telegram does nothing of the kind. The money question was ignored in the St. Louis platform because the delegates in favor of the republican system of sound money did not dare force their demands. The Bryan followers, wedded to free silver and flat money, were too strong to be turned down and the convention compromised its differences on the question by a cowardly dodge. So far as the democratic party is concerned, and it must be judged by its platform utterances, the money planks of 1896, and 1900 stand, and they must stand, as tenets of the democratic creed until changed by a vote of the democratic party in convention assembled.

The tariff question is also a "Federal enactment," as Mr. Cleveland would say. It would be just as logical as Mr. Cleveland's argument to insist that the omission of the tariff plank from the republican platform would remove the issue from the field of politics. The money question is just as much an issue as the tariff and must continue to be so long as the stability of our currency is opposed by probably a majority of the democratic party.

OUT OF THE WEST.

The following idea comes from a letter written by Attorney A. C. Hough, of Grant Pass, Ore., to a relative in Wisconsin. Mr. Hough formerly made his home in Wisconsin but several years ago went west and is now one of the leading attorneys of Grant Pass. The letter was written before the nomination of Parker at St. Louis and while a trifle old, the sentiment is so good and pat for the present situation that it is reprinted:

Let the sorehead and disaffected democrats and republicans organize a new party, nominate Bryan for president and La Follette for vice president; appoint Debs chairman of the national committee, and conduct a red hot rule of ruin campaign, and the chances are such a ticket would poll more votes than Parker and his crowd.

The man who confesses that he has just recovered from an attack of insanity would hardly be placed in charge of the affairs of a big business concern. Yet, that is the confession the democrats make while applying for the management of the largest business concern in the world.

When a party starts out to be reformers they should begin by reforming the members of the party first not trying to grab the moon out of the sky because they do not like the color and leaving their own dirty linen to be washed out on some one else's clothes line.

The banks of Kansas now have $110,000,000 on deposit and there is not a debased democratic dollar in the amount. The democratic platform adopted at St. Louis states for a Bryan dollar and it can not be changed by a telegram.

Mr. Bryan says that Parker's nomination "nullified the party's anti-trust declarations." If there is any doubt about that, make an inquiry as to the name of the treasurer of the democratic national committee.

The state political kettle keeps right on boiling and the soon to be coming to the top in the half-breed camp makes delightful reading for the democrats and republicans.

The legislature if convened to take up Mr. Lompf's case they may do and say such things that Governor Dobb might be sorry that he spoke.

Tom Taggart insists that he sees a democratic victory ahead in Indiana. Taggart should be treated for political strabismus.

Every vote for Parker and Davis is an attempt to change the axis on the dial and back the wheels that move forward.

The ignorantes at St. Louis were ordered to wear pants, but are not wearing them. Judge Parker ordered a gold plank inserted in the democratic platform, but it is not there.

The democrats are looking for a new party emblem, the only requirement being that it be made large enough to conceal a knife.

"Tammany extends her hands to the democratic candidate," says Bourke Cockran. Tammany always extends her hands palms up.

The democratic party professes to be ardently in favor of education, but it wants an expurgated edition of its party history.

The democratic donkey will feel a little awkward wearing a blanket embroidered with 3 marks.

The democrats have one motto which always fits. It is: "We are bound nowhere under full sale."

The republican candidates are running on a gold platform; the democratic on a gold telegram.

Col. Bryan is still the skipper in the Parker cheese.

ROOSEVELT'S ACCEPTANCE

Inspiring

(From the Pittsburgh Dispatch.)

It is an insinuating, coherent, content, pardonably proud speech. It is the keynote of the campaign strikes the keynote of the campaign effect. For seven years he has been part of an administration of national affairs, and he is content to be judged by our record of achievement. The grand, stirring and convincing exhibit of the republican party is that it has made the "dead square with the world." It can be forgiven abandonment of any hazy principles of expediency that might befog a candidate who is at the same time the president of all the people, by referring to the uncertainty, the insincerity, but the final capitulation "confidentially" of the opposition. It is impossible to disassociate the two facets of Mr. Roosevelt's position. That he would lay stress upon the unification of his party, as contrasted with the democratic attitude of doubt and dismay, must be conceded as current the strictest rules of etiquette. Current events might well have justified him in demanding, "Under which King, Bezonian?"

Effective Contrast

(From the Philadelphia Press.)

The opposition presents a contrast which the president suggests. In the most searching terms, the democratic appeal for confidence is based on the ground that "if triumphant they may be trusted to prove false to every principle which in the last eight years they have laid down as vital, and to leave undisturbed those very acts of the administration because of which they ask that the administration be driven from power." Their whole claim is a contradiction. This is their plea: "We have been all wrong, therefore we ought now to be treated as right; we have been unworthy of trust, therefore we ought now to be trusted; our past promises have been broken, therefore our present promises ought to be accepted; we will not overturn republican results, therefore the authors of those results ought to be overturned for us."

The Best Campaign Document

(From the New York Times.)

There will be no more effective document in the national campaign of 1904 than the speech of acceptance delivered by Theodore Roosevelt at Sagamore Hill. It is the republican platform summarized in its candidate, and tinged with the glowing and attractive personality of the foremost figure in public affairs. It is the record of the republican party told in brief by a statesman who has continued that record in such a way as to compel the nations to witness and to praise. Theodore Roosevelt accepts the nomination. The people accept him.

The Party That Governs

(From the Buffalo Express.)

The republican party is the party that does things. In or out of office, it has consistent policies, and when in office acts as a unit in fulfillment of its campaign pledges. The democracy very seldom is able to get together sufficiently to obtain office, and when in power cannot control its own membership sufficiently to secure a fulfillment of the promises on which it obtained office. It is the party of the permanent opposition, composed of opportunists, who turn their sails to every breeze. The republican party is the party of the nation. The democracy is controlled now by one section and again by another. It has been on every side of every question. Its "principles" are borrowed from every other party. Some of them are so old as to have been outgrown by other parties. Others are so new as not yet to have passed the stage of theory.

An Independent View

(From the Providence Journal, Ind.)

To the democrats who boast that their party is now "safe and sane" Mr. Roosevelt rebuffs: "Ours is not only safe, but coherent." So, too, he upholds the party records in turning rascals out of office, points to what it has done for a stable and sound currency, asks comparison of the working of present tariff laws with those of 1893, and deals the democrats a solar plexus blow on the reciprocity issue. "This he does by saying: 'It is a singular fact that the only great reciprocity treaty recently adopted— that with Cuba—was finally approved almost alone by the representatives of the very party which now states that it favors reciprocity.' This is a fair shot, and it goes direct to the bull's-eye. Of the boasts in regard to irrigation, the Panama canal, settlement of the Alaskan boundary dispute, our work in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines and of our foreign policy there can be little adverse criticism. They furnish honest party capital. The opposition can pick flaws in all these claims, but the independent must admit that the president has good reason for averring that his party has met most of the problems needing solution in the last seven years with 'reasonable efficiency.'"

Some Mistaken, Some Dishonest

(From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.)

In his address at Oyster bay yesterday accepting the nomination, President Roosevelt pointed out very effectively the difference between the attitude of the two parties at the opening of the campaign of 1904. The democrats ask for popular support on the ground that they will prove false to every doctrine which they have championed in the last eight years. They promise to leave republican legislation undisturbed, and at the same time they want the republicans put out of power because of that legislation. In effect, the democrats confess now that some of them were mistaken and other dishonest. This is the position which the democrats are in, as outlined by the president. No names are mentioned by Colonel Roosevelt, but the characterization fits Alton B. Parker with admirable fidelity. Judge Parker, although confessing in another connection that he voted for the silver standard in 1896 and 1900, and fought the republicans who established that standard, now pretends to accept the standard, and asks to have the republicans put out for bringing it.

Promises Kept

(From the Philadelphia Inquirer.)

"We have made the dead square with the world," said President Roosevelt, in accepting the nomination officially tendered him by Speaker Cannon. That is another way of saying that the republican party has kept its promises to the people. Is not the country contented under Roosevelt? The gold standard has been maintained and made a fixture, so that even Judge Parker, who twice supported and voted for the party and candidate of free silver, acknowledges it. Business interests have been strictly guarded from all disturbing influences, so far as a republican congress and a careful administration could do so. Steps have been taken to put an end to criminal combinations designed to restrain trade. In foreign affairs there has been a steady insistence on open ports in the far east to commerce. American citizens have been protected in their rights. There have been no dangerous foreign entanglements. On the contrary, the administration's policy, while it has been positive, has made for peace. The result is that the American nation is respected everywhere.

Conservative

(From the Washington Post, Ind.)

On the whole, the address is marked by a conservatism that will commend itself to the president's well-wishers and champions. There is much in it that his party can use to advantage; there is little, if anything, that will provide ammunition for the enemy. Better still, the address is short enough to be read, and all should read it.

To Be Judged by Its Record (From the Baltimore American.)

The party is entitled to be judged by its record of achievement. "In the years that have gone by we have made the dead square with the world," and that is what Mr. Roosevelt will do if elected to succeed himself. He compares the position of the republicans with that of the democrats, who "supposed for confidence on the ground, which some express and some seek to have confidentially understood, and if triumphant they may be trusted to prove false to every principle which in the last eight years they have laid down as vital. Seemingly, their present attitude as to their past record is that some of them were mistaken and others insincere. We are not constrained to keep silent on any vital question; we are divided on no vital question; our policy is continuous, and is the same for all sections and localities.

Marion Advertiser: Harry Monagle must be reckoning on an unusual amount of trade this fall for he is increasing his stock of jewelry considerably. Aside from the fine quality of goods Mac has on hand, he is considered a first class workman by all our citizens. But to complete everything, and make them permanent as it were, Harry should marry and begin keeping house, as well as a fine jewelry store.

The discouraging admission every one makes to himself is not what a fool he has been, but what a fool he would be again if similar opportunity offered.

The man who is thoughtful of his friends and kind to them is good enough for anybody. To send such a man to hell because he was sprinkled instead of baptized would be an outrage.

To hope to retain the intense appetite of youth is to be a glutton. The ravenous appetite of youth exists for a purpose, and that purpose is fulfilled with physical development. Don't eat too much.—Aitchison (Kan.) Globe.

LITTLE PIKE, JR. HELD SATURDAY

LITTLE LADIES OF THE THIRD
WARD AMBITIOUS,
PLAN NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT

Little Exhibitors Will Have a Model,
Up To-Date Affair on Jackson Street.

Tomorrow afternoon from two o'clock in the afternoon until nine o'clock at night the Little Pike, Jr., will be in full swing at the vacant lot on Jackson street opposite Judge Fife's residence. The promoters of this unique entertainment, Miss Mildred Doty and Miss Elsie Fife, state that it will be a genuine Pike and that everyone of the many features to be exhibited will be direct from the section of the world they represent.

Pretty Sight
This afternoon the scene of the future Pike represents a busy scene. Tents are being erected, Chinese lanterns strung and everything made ready for the gala event. Miss Mildred Doty will be a charming eyesore who will tell you your past, present and future inside her magic tent. Miss Elsie Fife will have the negro tent where plantation songs will be sung and a typical negro cabin represented. Miss Marenia Rogan will have charge of Fair Japan and dainty refreshments will be served. Josephine Doty will be the Pochontas to a little tribe of Indians that will sell dainty bits of true Indian work. Julia Hapke will have the Russian tent. It will be typical of the cold realms of the bear and a most interesting tent it will be. Miss Alta Fife will sell useful holders to all who wish to buy.

Just for Fun
The Little Pike, Jr., will be entirely the work of the little ladies who take part. They are enthusiastic over their production and hope the public will come. "It is just for fun," one of the promoters said this afternoon, and will be fun to witness the pretty sights the young ladies interested have prepared.

HUMAN WOLVES IN THE CITY LOCK-UP

Several Evil Looking Characters
Were Nabbed in Big Round-Up Yesterday.

Crooks and genuine bad men, some heavy jawed and muscular, others with woe faces and crafty, shifting burning eyes peered through the lattice work of the cells in the city lock-up this morning. Hidden among them and shame faced at their plight were a number of farm hands who had come in from Clinton, Stoughton and other towns to see the circus and had looked too long at the foaming cup. Against the latter alone could any charges be preferred, and they were released. Genuine "rums" the others were known to be but no means of identification were at hand. There was one man whose right eye had been shot out with a bullet and who carried a glass one in its place. He was perhaps the most forbidding looking one of them and the officers raked their memories in vain to recall where they had seen his picture and description. It is probable that before they are released photographs will be taken of him and a companion who claims that they were returning from the Pacific coast to New York city when they stopped off here. The round-up of seventeen filled every cell and left one man outside in the corridor. On the windows still were a half a dozen whiskey bottles that had been taken away from the prisoners. One of them was relieved of a shooting iron.

H. A. MURDOCK HURT AT CROSSING

Struck by a Northwestern Freight
Train at Six This Morning—
Wandered Away Yesterday.

Henry A. Murdock who came here from Broadhead some time ago to live at the home of his daughter, Mrs. E. O. Kimberley, and who had gone to the hospital department of the county house for treatment last Tuesday, wandered away last before noon yesterday and scuffling parties consisting of Supt. Kilham, Alex. Russell, Col. Kimberley, and others looked for him in vain yesterday afternoon. He had cut across lot through the fields and no trace of him could be found. Considerable alarm was felt as he is a man eighty-five years of age. The search was continued last evening without result. This morning at six o'clock an aged man was struck and thrown from the track by a North-Western freight train passing the River street crossing about three miles from the city. The train was brought to a stop and the man picked up by the injured man, who was recognized by one of them, and carefully placed in the caboose. Russell's ambulance was called to the depot and conveyed him back to the county house. Dr. Palmer who made the examination found that one rib was broken and some internal injuries had been sustained. For a man of younger years the accident would not have proved serious but Mr. Murdock's advanced years make his recovery a matter of some doubt.

VOGUE OF FOULARD.

New and Sotter Designs Popular—An Attractive Gown.
At the beginning of the spring season it was predicted that the vogue of the fouldard gown was at an end. Manufacturers decided that this should not be the case. They set about producing a new and even softer fouldard in exceptionally dainty designs. These new silks have been fashioned into some of the smartest gowns of the summer.

A particularly attractive model is the gray green fouldard frock illustrated. The full skirt is gathered with several rows about the waist and laid in Piquette tucks above a deep hem.

The corsage is shirred and blossomed back and front over a high grade of the silk. A tiny empiement and collar of tucked lawn complete this simple bodice. The sleeves are shirred from the elbow above a deep cuff.

Plans for the Cable.
When the first Atlantic cable was about to be laid, to obviate this supposed difficulty it was gravely proposed to festoon the cable across at a given maximum depth between buoys and floats, or even parachutes, at which ships should call, hook on and send messages to the shore. Others proposed to apply gummed cotton to the cable, set it afloat and leave the gum to dissolve and "let the cable down quickly."

First Big Expositions.
The first exposition was in Paris in 1789; the first in England in 1823, and in America in New York in 1853. These were not international like the World's Fair. The first of these was in London in 1851.

MRS. GEO. W. HALL BITTEN BY LEOPARDS

Former Evansville Resident Severely
Injured at Bayonne, N. J., in Animal's Cage.

In a recent publication of the Billboard the following paragraph appears: "Mrs. Hall, widow of the late George W. Hall of Evansville, now an inmate of the Harravens circus, was injured at Bayonne, N. J., recently. The lady is the principle feature of the side show. Her act consists of entering the cage of some savage leopards and putting them through a series of tricks. The animals, while sulky and hard to work, were not considered dangerous, but with little or no warning, they suddenly turned on her, and before the attendants could reach her and render assistance, she was quite severely bitten."

The Mrs. Hall evidently referred to in the above clipping is the wife of Col. George W. Hall, now living at Evansville. When in the city yesterday Col. Hall showed a letter from Mrs. Hall received Monday which told of the accident but said it was not serious. Mrs. Hall is doing her famous act with the Harravens circus and the leopards she uses are ones that Col. Hall raised and broke himself. They are part tiger and part leopard. Aside from Mrs. Hall, Miss Hall is also with the same show, exhibiting Columbus, the biggest elephant in the world which is owned by the colonel. A son, George Hall, is with the Van Amburg show this season.

Ostrich Plucking.
Ostrich plucking is really not a "plucking" but a "cutting," says a writer in Country Life in America. The ostrich is coaxed into a wedge-shaped inclosure and a small bag drawn over his head, which renders him unresisting. The large plumes are carefully cut, leaving an inch of the quill, which in time drops out. A few of the small feathers, when ready to fall out, are really plucked. An ostrich yields about fifty feathers at a plucking.

Finger Print Identification.
Addressing the Anthropological Society in London, the Rev. M. Collyer, a missionary, said he had been able to trace the use of the system of identification by finger impressions (recently introduced in Europe) for 1,200 years in Korea in the deeds of slave.

Smiths Found Everywhere.
Some of the Smiths have got as far away from home as China. They have been there long enough to imitate Oriental ideas and to become established in trade. There is a Shanghai and Canton Smith. Smith of Shanghai runs to art, apparently; at any rate he is described as a "maker of fine cabinets." Smith of Canton is probably an artist, too, in his way; he is an auctioneer.

An Animal Story For Little Folks The Lovesick Hippo

Near the mouth of a large river in Africa there lived a young Miss Hippopotamus. She was not very proud of her looks, and she always wrote her name without the hyphen.

But one day as she was taking a sun bath, with just her nose and flat back above water, there came by that way a very wise professor of natural history, who, seeing Miss Hippo at her bath, seemed full of delight and cried out: "What a beauty! What a beauty! I'd like to take her with me." Poor Miss Hippo was greatly excited and ducked her head at once, as any well-mannered young lady would do at such a time. When she came back to the surface again the professor had gone, but his words had turned Miss Hippo's head.

"He meant me, of course," she said to herself. "Then I must be handsome after all, and he did say that he would TOOK A STICK AND WROTE ON THE SAND, like to take me with him. How nice it would be to go off with that handsome man! And he called me a beauty!" Poor Miss Hippo began to be vain. She dressed herself in her very best gown, she put on her Easter bonnet, and, taking her parasol, she waded out on the sandy bank.

"He is not here, but he will come back," she sighed. "I will leave a message for him." So she took a stick and wrote on the sand:

"Please, dear Mr. Man, come back. You can have me any time. I shall be here at this time tomorrow. Miss Hippopotamus." And this time she put in the hyphen.

But when she came back the next day the tide in the river had risen and washed out all her message. Each day she wrote, but each day the water washed out her writing.

The professor never came back, and the poor hippo grew thinner and thinner until her skirts got too big.

"I shall die for love of him," she said.

And she did. Wasn't she foolish?—Detroit Journal.

"He happened to be dining here, too, one night when Bishop Page stopped over with us on his way to Florida. There were several young men present, among them Turley Dandridge, who belongs to one of the very oldest families in Georgia and is considered the catch of the county. Well, he sat there like a stick in the cushion of his chair and let Mr. Buckley conduct the entire conversation with the bishop. In fact, Bishop Page simply directed most of his remarks to Mr. Buckley, and it really was an intellectual treat. He tripped the bishop up twice, and the old man flushed, but laughingly admitted he was wrong. He was most favorably impressed with Mr. Buckley, and, of course, I did not enter into awkward explanations. Yes, his manners could not be improved. He must have associated with refined people when he was off at college. I shall always say for him to put his elbows on the dinner table without seeming to do it. I don't say Mr. Buckley puts his on, but he doesn't sit up like a post and not know what to do with his hands, as some men do. He sets, even on occasions like that dinner, as if such things were an everyday affair. The maid, in passing around the table, awkwardly touched his elbow just as he was about to drink from his glass of claret and shook some of the wine out on his best cloth. Now, I once saw the same thing happen to a man in Richmond, and he promptly laid the blame where it belonged, to acquit himself of appearing awkward, but Mr. Buckley treated it with superb indifference. He was telling some story, and he did not even pause, but, taking a salt cellar, he poured some of the salt on the spot, and as he continued to talk he kept rubbing it in as if he hardly knew what he was doing. The salt saved the cloth from a bad stain, and it was all done as a prince might have done it.

"You know the negroes can never forgive the poor whites for rising into prominence, and Missy, when she was clearing away the things from the table that evening, called to me, 'Come here, Miss Amy,' she said, with a sneer; 'everybody done let der napskin on he table 'cept dat po' white trash, on he left his in his chair.' Of course it was a little thing and has no weight one way or another; but, do you know, the next month when I was back in Richmond, and your aunt Tilly had that young English lord to dinner, I watched everything he did and noticed that he dropped his napkin in his chair when he left the table. I have since learned that it is quite customary over there. 'We don't do it, you know, but really they would look nicer in the chairs than a lot of linen was stuck about among the finger bowls and salad dishes. They would be less suggestive of the lavatory of a drowsed sleeping car early in the morning.

Kitty Cosby drew a full breath when Mrs. Cranston paused.

"And on top of all that you say he's good looking," she said, with a pretty smile. "Well, I'll tell you, you'd better send me back to Richmond. My folks have certain vague matrimonial plans for me, and I don't know whether I'm safe here or not. I always did love to kick over the traces."

"Oh, do be sensible, Kitty," said the girl, more seriously. "Lydia would hate to cause discord in the family. I know, but nine girls out of ten would fall dead in love with that sort of man under those circumstances, and they would want to stick to him too."

"Oh, Kitty, how could we—how could we possibly write back that our only child was to marry a man like that? What would the Parsons, the Woodburys, the DeMarses, think? And Aunt Hallie, who at once gets the particulars, and if the name were not down in Bishop Meade's 'Old Families and Churches' she'd have a fit. It won't do, Kitty; it won't do. Something has got to be done."

"Yes, but what?" said the girl. "You can count on me. I'll earn my board while I'm here if I possibly can. How does Governor Telfaire like his rival?"

"He's simply crazy, Kitty. He is just at the age to want to do things in a hurry too. Folks say he never cared for his dead wife, and I suppose this is really his first love affair. He confided in me and said he simply could not bear a refusal. Then, just as I have explained to you, I told him what we feared in regard to Lydia's sympathy—I advised it that—for Governor Buckley and called him to handle her cautiously. He turned as white as a sheet, and his proud, thin lip curled like an angry dog's.

"Do you mean to tell me, Mrs. Cranston, he said, that I have a rival in that man, the son of a Georgia colonel—the only living Telfaire in the line—I, who have been honored by my state as the Telfaires before me have been honored? And I to meet on equal ground, under the roof of the most aristocratic family of the Old Dominion, a man of that rank?"

"I was awfully frightened over his manner, but I simply held to the ground that Lydia had a good heart and was loyal to her unfortunate friends, and that if he wanted to lose her by being independent and rousing her anger I should feel that I had given him due warning. He cooled down a little, and my talk didn't do the cause a bit of harm, for he simply dodged Lydia's footsteps all the rest of his visit, and when he went back to Atlanta he sent her fully $50 worth of roses. The major says I ought never to have mentioned Governor Buckley's name to him—that Governor Telfaire is a most dangerous man, with a violent temper. He says he'd actually be afraid to have the two men meet here, but I wouldn't. Buckley is a brave man, I've no doubt, but I'd venture anything that he'd control himself under any circumstances."

When the two ladies had gone back to the house and parted in the big hall Miss Cosby turned into the parlor, where our heroine sat at the piano, fiddling her hands over the keys.

"I declare, you are a lucky girl, Lydia," said Kitty.

"To have you with me, dear, in this quiet place?" smiled Lydia, looking up. "No." The visitor bent over the speaker. "Guess again."

"I'm not good at guessing. It's tiresome, like playing whist when one is out of practice."

"Lydia, every girl in our set simply went wild when we heard about the marked attentions you were receiving from Governor Telfaire. You know there are piles and piles of unmarried girls in the south and very, very few young, unyoked governors."

"That's quite true," said Lydia, with a noncommittal smile.

"It would be nice, dear," went on Kitty, "to be the mistress of that mansion in Atlanta and preside at every function of state in the town. That's about the nearest approach we make to royalty, you know. Goodness knows, if I had the money I'd buy it in an ear!"

Lydia bowed her head over the keys and laughed merrily. "It wouldn't be bad, would it—the Atlanta house, I mean?"

"I should say not," Miss Cosby was trying to probe the laugh.

"Look here, Kitty," Lydia said, suddenly rising and laying her hands on Miss Cosby's shoulders and pressing them down firmly. "Take my advice and turn in and have a good time while you are here and don't waste a minute fooling with mamma's plots. She's as transparent as a pane of glass, and so are you, darling. Transparency is contagious. You used to be harder to see through."

"The idea?" Miss Cosby said. "Why, Lydia, you silly goose!" But she seemed unable to defend herself against the implied charge and could only repeat, "The idea of such a thing!"

CHAPTER XVII.

ONE morning about the 1st of December George was alone in the office. He had just finished writing some letters when Jeff Truitt came in and stood near the stove. He was a slender young man, under twenty-five, short and frail looking. His clothing was ragged and his sandy hair unkempt. Buckley looked at him and smiled. "Been getting yourself into no end of rows over home," he remarked. "My mother tells me they sent you a death's head the other night, and your father said somebody shot at you in the field."

"That's all so, George," said Truitt gloomily. "I reckon I've been shootin' off my mouth a little too much."

"I really thought you had more sense than to report that desperate gang over there for moonshining," said George in a kindly tone.

"Wouldn't 'a' done it if I'd been sober," replied Truitt. "They made me mad when I was full, an' I done 'em all the harm I could."

"Well, what are you going to do about it, Jeff?"

"That's what I come to ask you, George. Ma and pa are mighty nigh crazy about it, an' I give 'em my word I'd come an' ax yore advice. By gum, they think they'll go to you when they die? If you was me would you go back over that today, George? I-I got another warnin' last night; in fact, six or eight of 'em was scattered all about the place. I say warnin', but I reckon they was wuss than that; they was to pa an' ma an' said of they ketches me they wouldn't do a thing to me."

"Well, there's some consolation in that," said George dryly. "You know I ain't afraid of any reasonable number of men," said Truitt in his whining voice, "but when a whole regiment of 'em comes to drink a fellow's blood I jest git rattled an' want to make tracks. If I had my way, though, I'd go back home an' defy 'em, but ma's mighty nigh crazy."

"No, you'd better stay in town today anyway, Jeff," said Buckley after a moment's reflection. "Go up to the Johnston House and get your breakfast—take all your meals there while you are in town—I've got an account there; tell them to charge it to me. Stay in town tonight anyway. I'll see you to-morrow. I'm very busy today. Do you think the gang would dare follow you here?"

"They might, George. They raised a rumpus here about a year ago, you know—whippin' niggers in Nigger-town."

Later in the morning Buckley met the town marshal, Joe Bates, on the street. The officer wore a broad-brimmed hat, a dark blue suit of clothes with brass buttons and carried a policeman's club strapped to his wrist. George gravely explained the situation to him, but the officer refused to concern himself in the matter.

"Look y' here, George Buckley," he said. "Do you reckon I'm paid measly town wages to do both town and county work? If the sheriff can't keep down them riots over there in the mountains, I can't. For $20 a month I'm expected to do police duty in daytime, watchman at night an' act as coroner on special occasions. Besides, Jeff Truitt's gettin' entirely too numerous. Every time he gets full he wants to scratch some of them dardevils' eyes out. He's a funny chap. They say when he's drunk he'd fight a swarm of wildcats, but when he's sober he'd scare at the sight of a baby popgun, an', on top of that, when he soles up he's so stultish he'd die 'fore he would apologize for what he's done. What you got to do with a man like that? He's no ornament to the community."

"Well, I only thought I'd let you know the situation," George smiled as he walked on. "All I want to do is to save the fellow's neck."

George saw no more of Jeff Truitt that day. He had some important calculations to make in connection with the sale of certain large quantities of cotton to mills in the east, and he was closely occupied in his office till past midnight. When he had finished he went to the front door of the warehouse to get a breath of fresh air before retiring. He did not feel sleepy. Such work as he had been doing usually had a contrary effect on him. Suddenly he heard a shout up the street in the direction of the Johnston House, a revolver was fired, and a gruff voice cried out, "That he goes, boys!"

This was followed by a clatter of many feet on the brick sidewalk, a storm of furious exclamations and stifled oaths, and then a dark human ball rushed down the street in Buckley's direction. It was a mob pursuing Jeff Truitt.

Hardly knowing why he did it, George ran into his office and secured his big revolver from the drawer of his desk and turned back quickly to the door. He was just in time, for the mob, numbering fifty or more, was not ten yards away. Punting and almost out of breath, Jeff Truitt came bounding along ahead of them and just out of their grasp. He was making for the warehouse with the instinct that there, and there alone, lay some chance for escape. He gasped out something to George and darted past him into the warehouse.

"Halt!" George thundered, his revolver leveled at the man in the lead. "Halt or I'll blow your brains out!"

The man fell back against those behind him, and the surging mass came to a sudden pause.

"Halt! What's this?" panted a man in the rear. "What's this?"

"It's me," said Buckley calmly. "That boy has come to me for protection, and he shall have it if I have to shoot six of you in your tracks!"

"Oh, thunder! Come off!" sneered a man in the front. "Get out of the door, Buckley, or we'll mash you flatter'n a flitter."

"The first man that tries to pass this step dies as sure as God's in heaven!" There was a swerving back from the weapon in Buckley's steady hand. Silence fell—a threatening silence. The cocking of a revolver somewhere in the crowd sounded clearly.

"That's right, shoot at me, you dirty coward," said Buckley defiantly. "Here I stand in the light, and I can't pick you out in the dark. Shoot, you cowardly sneak!"

"Put that gun down," cried a determined voice in the throng. "You harm George Buckley an' I'll put daylight through you."

There was a sound of a struggle, stifled oaths and the clash of a revolver as it struck the pavement. It was followed by grumbling words, hot disputation and silence.

"You are a set of cowards," said Buckley, "rattling like a pack of wolves after a poor boy for what he said and did when he was drunk. Now, clear out, the last one of you! You know who I am—and you know if there is any one of you, or any three, that want to hold me responsible for this step I'll be on hand. Has any one here any row to pick with Jeff Truitt, then, let him speak up. I'll represent him. I'm in a flitching mood tonight and I'll satisfy just as many as will apply."

"An' he'll do it, too, boys," said an admiring voice. "Buckley's got the right stuff in 'im! Come on, let's go home. George seems friendly to the cause, an' any friend of his is safe as far as I'm concerned."

"Same here," joined in another voice. "Buck, you're all right, but that's a dern sneak and yore takin' up fer, as shore as yore knee high to a duck."

"Well, he's my friend, and I'm his mother's friend," said Buckley. "A mob like yours shouldn't send his corpse home to her if I can help it."

"He'd be about as much use to 'er that a-way as in his natural condition," laughed a man near the front. "But of she hunkers after 'im, an' Buckley wants 'im to live on, I'll withdraw my claim. This is the sort of rabbit hunt I don't much like now."

A high rose and went round. It was a favorable sign. George lowered his revolver. "Go home, boys," he said wearily. "I'm sorry I spoke as I did just now. You are all my friends; I can see that. Good night."

They stood for an instant as if uncertain what step to take, but Buckley's last words had completely disarmed them. Slowly they disbanded and straggled away. When they were all lost in the darkness George closed the door and locked it. Just then Jeff Truitt emerged from the darkness in the interior of the building and, with hanging head and downcast eyes, drew near.

"Oh, George," he faltered, "I wish they had killed me. I'm a coward. I was afraid of 'em—afraid of 'em!" (To be Continued.)

MILDRED'S ADVANCE.

Mildred Montmorency, the beautiful chorus girl, reclined indolently upon the box couch in her dressing room. Dreamily she closed her eyes.

Afar off she could hear the gentle murmur of the orchestra and the occasional high notes of the prima donna. Once in a while the dull rumble of applause from the audience penetrated to her dressing-room.

Suddenly she rose to her full height and surveyed her perfect form critically.

"Why should I be only a chorus girl?" she thought. "Why should I slave away with the dozens of stupid, unambitious, tiresome things in the chorus with me? With my voice, my figure, my face, I should easily become a star—if I had the money."

A girl, passing in the corridor, poked her head inside the door.

"Coming, Mildred?" she asked. "It's almost time for us. The zoo-zoo song goes on in a minute."

"I'll thank you to remember, Miss Rosenbush, that I can always tell when I am needed. You mind your biz."

Left alone to herself, Miss Montmorency once more stretched her lithe and lissome figure upon the box couch, rudely covered with an imitation Turkish drapery, and breathed the sigh of the self-satisfied.

Suddenly there was a knock at the door.

"Miss Montmorency! Miss Montmorency!"

It was the stage manager, Bartholdi, who called. The voice, the repeated knocks on the door, aroused Miss Montmorency. She hurriedly opened the door, and faced Bartholdi.

"What is it, Bart?" she inquired.

"Ach Himmel! The prima donna, Miss Highnote, has fainted on the stage. We have rung down the curtain. The audience must go home, unless you will help us."

"What can I do?"

The timid, shrinking chorus girl gazed at the stage manager in wonder.

"You must go on and finish the prima donna's part."

"Impossible!"

"You must. You alone know the music. You can sing like a bird—you need no rehearsal, for you have watched Miss Highnote every night. I beg of you, make the effort."

"One moment."

The humble chorus girl assumed a more imperious demeanor.

"I will sing the role, but on one condition."

"Name it. Name anything. Only sing."

"It is that henceforth my salary shall be $175 a week, instead of the $125 I have been receiving."

Bartholdi gasped out his astonishment.

"You are mad. A hundred and seventy-five? Why, you are crazy."

Mildred closed her lips firmly.

"Very well, then. Dismiss your audience."

Bartholdi wavered. He consented. The salary was fixed at $175 a week.

"And I must have a maid."

"You shall have a maid."

"And the star's dressing room?"

"I will have her things moved out at once."

"And a press agent?"

"He will report to you to-morrow for instructions."

"Very well, then. Lead the way. I will sing."

A sea of faces, cold, unrelenting, forboding, greeted Mildred Montmorency as she first stepped before the footlights. Somehow, it seemed to her as though they were so many wild beasts waiting to tear her to pieces. She trembled and would have fallen.

"Courage," whispered Bartholdi from the wings.

"Be brave," murmured the musical director, across the footlights.

The director's baton rose and fell. The orchestra began. The audience was as silent as death itself.

Then Mildred opened her lips and a flood of melody broke forth upon the still air. Slowly at first, then faster and faster as the tempo of the song changed, she sang her first solo.

High and higher went the notes. Nearer and nearer she reached the topmost pinnacle of the Patti register. The audience was thrilled through and through. Suddenly, with a rising crescendo of her marvelous voice, she sang higher than ever Patti dared climb.

The next moment all was in an uproar. A volcano of applause poured enthusiastic approval upon the fair young debutante. The musical director broke his baton in excitement. Bartholdi, the stage manager, rushed forward impulsively from the wings and embraced his protégé, his discovery.

For five minutes the excitement continued. In vain the manager tried to quell the disturbance.

In the midst of the uproar the stage manager lowered the asbestos fire curtain to shut off the applause from its unwilling victim, and Mildred Montmorency, half-fainting, was carried to her dressing-room, while in her ears still rang the noise of the terrific applause.

There was a loud banging on the door.

"Miss Montmorency."

Slowly the figure on the box couch arose and opened the door.

Bartholdi, the stage manager, stood outside.

"Miss Montmorency, this is the third time you have missed your place in the zoo-zoo song and pony ballet. You are discharged. No tears, now. This is final. I repeat it, you are discharged."—N. Y. Sun.

Worms Spin Colored Silk.

By means of subcutaneous injections, silkworms have just been made to spin pink silk.

THEIR FAVORITE DISHES.

George Sands not only liked sauces but excelled in making them.

Stonewall Jackson delighted in buckwheat cakes—in season and out of season.

Napoleon's favorite dish was bean salad, much cheaper in his time, but equally good.

Louis XV. was "extravagantly" fond of a dish made of the eggs of various birds, which cost $100.

Ralph Waldo Emerson was fond of pie—especially that made of plums, which he called the fruit paradise.

Queen Victoria is said to have given mutton the preference in the line of meats, and was nowise offended if offered "the cold shoulder."

Henry VIII. was extremely fond of beans, and imported a Dutch gardener to raise them, as in his day they were only used by the upper classes—"a dish to set before the king."

Lincoln, in the days when he did his own marketing, often stopped at a certain shop for his favorite—gluten-bread. He used to say: "It swells me up and makes me feel as if I had had something."

Queen Elizabeth was very fond of roast goose. She was dining on this when the good news was brought her on Michaelmas day that the Spanish fleet had been driven back. And ever since that fowl has been to the English feast of St. Michael what the turkey is to our Thanksgiving day.—What to Eat.

WIT AND WISDOM.

He who aims high should aim well.

A good stiff, windy day will take the conceit out of any woman.

Nothing less than a ten-ton tombstone could keep some people down.

A man will balk at small worries and take a flying leap over great troubles.

If love were copyrighted in Eden, should the apple and the snake be its trademark?

It isn't every prodigal who finds the fatted calf already roasted, with the gravy and trimming on the side.

It's one thing to love your neighbor as yourself, but it is quite another to help him shovel in coal when it's raining.

Seedless apples! Perish the propagator who destroys the fond illusion: "One, I love; two, I love; three, I love, I say."

When the woman who scolded and the man who swears engage in a friendly bout there's apt to be some pretty lively sparring.

When a man says, "Goodness only knows," he does not mean his wife, because if she only knows, everybody else is sure to know.—Kate Thyson Marr.

THE AMATEUR PHILOSOPHER.

The greatness that is thrust upon a man has a tendency to wear off quickly.

One trouble with a large percentage of the people is that as soon as they get automobiles they leave their seats behind.

Notwithstanding the deep feeling of friendship that England has for America, it does not appear that the Prince of Wales was named after George Washington.

A Boston bard has written a poem entitled "Out in the Fields With God." From a perusal of the verses we get the impression that the poet regarded it as a condescension on his part to go out.

REFLECTIONS OF A BACHELOR.

Virtue comes as easy to the sere and yellow as the other thing to the salad days.

When a woman has on baby blue silk stockings she is pretty sure something is going to happen.

Separating and becoming reconciled isn't a patch to the problem of not separating and becoming reconciled.

A man who has run for office is never very much afraid of what is going to happen to him when he dies.

It's mighty curious how interested a man can be in certain funny kinds of clothes if they don't belong to his wife.—New York Press.

SOMETHING ABOUT WOMEN.

A girl is terribly afraid of rats every place except in her hair.

It is hard for a girl to understand that the one who is least talked about is the best liked.

A gentlewoman is always a gentle woman, even when no one is there except papa and mamma.

The woman who will not wait twenty-five minutes for the change from a $5 bill after making a $4.00 purchase is a new woman.—Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.

Steel Replaces Hemp. Steel is slowly but surely displacing hemp as the material of which all hawsers and ropes are made in the ships of the British fleet.

Plans Trolley Parties.

A central office for the supplying of information about all the possible trips by trolley in the vicinity of Boston, has been opened up in that city by a man who also undertakes personally to conduct parties around the country near Boston. These trips cover from one to three days and take in all the interesting points within easy reach. The traveling is done exclusively by trolley.
